Movistar cycling team 2020 roster

The team was originally founded in Pamplona as an amateur team by Eusebio Unzué, who still manages it after leaving the wise José Miguel Echavari in the driver's seat for many years. After 37 consecutive Tour de France starts, management still remembers how the team burst dramatically onto the Tour stage. Her first participation, in 1983, ended with Ángel Arroyo as runner-up to Laurent Fignon! He also took a superb 1-2 in the time trial of Puy de Dôme, where the other rider was Pedro Delgado, who would go on to become the third champion of the Spanish Tour de France in 1988, following in the footsteps of Federico Bahamontes and Luis Ocaña. Banesto Bank then took over from Reynolds aluminium company and Miguel Indurain filled Delgado's shoes. Navarrese, a home rider who remained loyal to the team until he retired on January 2, 1997, came to the epitome of Spanish cycling. Echavari and Unzué tried to continue the success story started by Indurain by hiring Abraham Olano and Alejandro Valverde, who managed to win the Vuelta a España, but not the Tour de France, where all he got were stage victories. However, fate came in a strange and utterly incredible way to bring the yellow jersey back to Navarre when, in 2006, the peloton gifted Oscar Pereiro half an hour into a breakaway after he had conceded 26 minutes to the Pyrenees. Under her different idols as Illes Valesares, Caisse d'Epargne and Movistar, the evergreen Spanish Armada has rarely left the Grande Boukle empty-handed. In 2012, Valverde took the eleventh-hour opportunity in the Pyrenees by winning the Peyragides stage. In 2014, he finished just off the podium, but eventually climbed for the first time in 2015, at the ripe age of 35, taking third place, while Neiro Quintana resumed in 2013 to finish second. The Colombian won another podium place in 2016 (third), but failed in 2017 (twelfth) when Valverde was knocked out of the race by a nasty crash in the opening time in Dusseldorf. The only survivor of the troubled Spanish cycling scene, a team that has seen great champions come and go, Movistar is a true Tour team, past and present. In 2018 and 2019, he again demonstrated his courage in grande boukle in the face of Team Sky/Ineos dominance, taking a mountain stage with Quintana as well as the team rankings, but failing to influence the race for the podium, as he distributed her resources to three riders instead of focusing on a single leader. As a result, Mikel Landa, Nairo Quintana and Alejandro Valverde finished seventh, tenth and tenth in 2018 and sixth, eighth and ninth in 2019, respectively. At the ripe age of 40, the 2018 world champion is the only one of the three left in the competing alongside Enrick Mas, regarded by some as the next Contador. Three days before the start of the 2020 Tour de France, in the 38th appearance of the event now known as the Movistar Team in the most famous event of the event. Organization: the Eusebio Unzué-led team announced its eight-man lineup for the 10th edition of Grande Boukle. The Blues' roster on French soil consists of Dario Cataldo, Imanol Erviti, Enric Mas, Nelson Oliveira, José Joaquín Rojas, Marc Soler, Alejandro Valverde and Carlos Verona, with Antonio Pedero and Jürgen Roelandts as reserves for any eventuality. José Luis Arrieta, Patxi Vila and Pablo Lastras will be the sporting directors of Movistar Team during the 2020 TDF. The Telefónica-backed team, which has stayed for the past week at Couchevel, making a recon of this year's Alpine stages, travelled to Nice last Sunday to complete their preparations for the event, which begins on Saturday, August 29 and will end in Paris on Sunday, September 20 (Guide). Eusebio Unzué's women's and men's teams begin their fifth decade of fine activity with a big event at Telefónica's headquarters in Madrid on Thursday by Spanish road racing champions Alejandro Valverde & Lourdes Oyarbide showed, along with their teammates, the new jersey of the Telefónica-backed team, which makes a huge bet on youth: Enric Mas (24) and Marc Soler (26) will lead the men's team along with Valverde, while the women's program, all 29 years old or younger, will debut in the new UCI Women's WorldTour category U to fourteen nationalities from all over Europe and Latin America make up a team of nearly 40 athletes, with three young riders in the women's team and up to 14 in the men's team, including eight riders aged 23 years or under the tenth year of Telefónica's successive sponsorship in the team, the company reaffirmed its support for cycling as a whole, and announced the promotion, an internal documentary about all the matches the Blues took part in in 2019 in Madrid, 19 December 2019.- Telefónica's headquarters in Madrid was the venue for Thursday's launch of the Movistar 2020 Group. The longest,most successful cycling team in the international peloton began its 41st season of uninterrupted activity, a period (since 1980) in which the Blues' men's and women's teams have achieved more than 950 victories. Wins. celebrated the ten years of sponsorship of the title of the sports organization Abarca with the two full roster of the team coordinated by general manager Eusebio Unzué. Media from Spain and abroad, VIPs, famous names from the world of cycling and members of Telefónica and other team sponsors enjoyed the unveiling of the new blue jersey, a design created by new sponsor Alé. Movistar Team's 2020 combines its eternal support for Spanish cycling, with 21 local riders - more than half of the team - with enhanced international focus and a renewed team. The women's team, recently confirmed by Union Cycliste Internationale as a new member of the Women's WorldTour – only five other cycling teams in the world will have its 2020 men's and women's teams in the respective top tiers –, consists of riders all 29 years of age or under. National champions Oyarbide and Sheyla Gutiérrez, as well as Eider Merino and Paula Patiño of Colombia, are the most important names in a truly compact team. The 2020 men's team, in turn, marks a marked change unlike last year. Fourteen new names make for a new face on a block still led by the legendary Alejandro Valverde, with youngsters Enric Mas and Marc Soler also leading a team featuring eight riders aged 23 and under: Eusegui, Rubio, Jorgenson, Alba, Jacobs, Hollmann, Cungaigh and the only absentee at the gala, Mathias Norsgaard, due to a foot injury earlier this month. Rafael Fernández de Alarcón, Telefónica's director of brand, Partnerships and Media Telefónica, remember during the event that the sponsorship of the Movistar team came at a very difficult time for cycling, and took advantage of the gala to reaffirm Telefónica's commitment to this sport in both professional and amateur scenes, through various initiatives such as different team rides and projects carried out with the Royal Spanish Cycling Federation. During the event, it was also announced that an internal documentary will be screened in 2020 for the team's previous season, a set of cameramen participating in the team in all competitions and capturing all the moments, good and not so good, that the Blues experienced during 2019. The series will follow other original Movistar+ products during last season, such as Alejandro Valverde's documentary Rainbow Age or one that sums up the team's 40 years of existence. Once again, the Movistar team will debut the season in the men's Tour Down Under in Australia (19-26 January) and the women's Vuelta CV Fémimas in Spain (9 February), covering a calendar of over 300 racing days, in twenty countries on five continents, which most of WorldTour in both categories with the best Spanish races. In 2020, the Blues will reach 3,000,000 km of racing with Telefónica as a title sponsor, having received 280 wins, three Grand Tours and two World Championships in the process. More than 30 high-end companies and a fan base close to two million followers on social media and its official website they will again be the biggest assets of this amazing sports team.
